ACPA Names First Recipient of Outstanding Health, Safety & Environmental Stewardship Award

Skokie, Ill.—The American Concrete Pavement Association (ACPA) has named Dominique Lueckenhoff the inaugural recipient of ACPA's Outstanding Health, Safety & Environmental Stewardship award. This national award will be presented to those who have made significant contributions toward improving health, safety, or environmental stewardship in the transportation community, and within it, the concrete pavement industry.

As Associate Director of the Water Protection Division of the Office of Watersheds in the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency's Region III Office, Lueckenhoff actively supports the concrete pavement industry's efforts at innovative problem solving. Her award will be presented to her at a later date.

Each year, ACPA recognizes a select number of people and projects that represent the best-of-the-best in the concrete pavement industry, as well as the public sector.

These awards recognize the commitments and accomplishments of some of the most forward thinking and determined professionals in the transportation community.

ACPA is the national trade association for the concrete pavement industry. ACPA's primary mission is to advocate for the use of concrete pavement in highways, airfields, and roadways throughout the United States.
